Review: A comprehensive, UK-based harm reduction site with drug information, policy papers, best practice models, research and an online library to support professionals working in treatment, education, prevention and criminal justice. Other benefits for members and professionals include regular professional development, networking, newsletters, support to influence policy and access to publications. The FAQ's section addresses general interest questions about illicit substances in a factual, non-judgmental manner adopting a harm reduction approach. If using this site with secondary students there is interesting content for discussion around the development of strategies to keep safe.

Review: A specialist court for offenders who are drug dependent and identified as being able to benefit from a detox and rehab treatment program. Individuals are remanded in custody for detoxification and assessment before referral to a three phase program (phase 1: Initiation and Stabilisation; phase 2: Consolidation; phase 3: Re-integration). The programs are evidence-based and designed to shift participants from a lifestyle that is dominated by addiction and criminal activity to one which is drug-free and includes employment or readiness for employment. Participants are expected to complete drug tests throughout the program and make a commitment to a healthier lifestyle.
